

Abdur Rab [rab_abdur@yahoo.com]. Except for a brief stint as a lecturer in economics in Dhaka University, Dr. Rab held research and consulting positions throughout his career with numerous organizations, including the Bangladesh and former undivided Pakistan governments. He served the Pakistan Institute of Development Economics as a Staff and Research Economist, the Pakistan Tariff Commission as a Member, and the Bangladesh Planning Commission as Section Chief and Senior Consultant. He was an industrial economist with UNIDO, financial and monetary advisor for the Uganda government under a World Bank assignment, and a senior industrial economist for the Qatar government under a UNIDO assignment. He also did consulting for various development projects in Bangladesh supported by USAID, the World Bank, UNDP, and the Asian Development Bank, and also for the US-based International Fertilizer Development Center (IFDC). He holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Dhaka University and a Ph.D. from Harvard University. Born and brought up in a traditional Bengali Muslim family, Dr. Rab has been a devoted follower of the traditional teachings and rituals of Islam since his childhood. However, when he went to college, he came into close contact with a versatile spiritual teacher Shah Aksaruddin Ahmad and underwent a paradigm change in his religious approach. Inspired by him, Dr. Rab closely studied the Qur'an to learn about genuine Islam. Afterwards he studied also the Hadith and relevant literature of modern Islamic scholars. He is author of Exploring Islam in a New Light: A View from the Quranic Perspective, Brainbow Press, 2010. Abdur Rab lives in Houston, Texas. His website: www.exploreQuran.org