

Alan Godlas [godlas@uga.edu] is currently associate professor teaching Islamic studies, world religions, and Arabic in the Department of Religion at the University of Georgia (UGA), where he has been teaching since receiving his Ph.D (1991) from the University of California, Berkeley. He is the co-director of the UGA Arabic major and the Maymester in the Morocco program. Before beginning his training in Islamic studies he received two years of professional training in Gestalt psychotherapy after receiving his BS in ecological psychology from the University of California, Davis. His most recent publications include “Reconciling the Study of Islam and Modern Psychology” in B. Guiderdoni, Islam, Reason and Peace: Views of Western Muslim Scholars (in press); “Building Bridges: Cross Disciplinary Collaboration between Psychotherapists and a Scholar of Islam” (under review); “A Religiological Analysis of Nursi’s View of Sufism Expressed in the ‘Nine Allusions’ (Telvihât-i ‘Tis’a) of the Risale-i Nur,” Journal of Islam and Christian-Muslim Relations, 2008; “The Islamic Collection of B. G. Martin,” UGA Library Journal, Winter 2007; “Qur’an Interpretation: Sufism” (A survey of the genre), ch. 23 in Blackwell’s Companion to the Qur’an, ed., Andrew Rippin, 2006; and “Surrender: its Significance for Today and in the Qur’anic Commentary of Rûzbihân al-Baqlî,” in Mohammed Faghfoory, ed., Beacon of Knowledge, 2003. His primary current project is a translation of Ruzbihan al-Baqli’s Sufi Qur’an commentary, ‘Ara’is al-bayan. Prof. Godlas is most well-known for his Webby nominated website Islam and Islamic Studies Resources, www.uga.edu/islam, 1997 - present; and also for his website Sufism, Sufis, and Sufi Orders: Sufism’s Many Paths www.uga.edu/islam/Sufism.html. He is the editor-in-chief of the daily internet news service: Sufi News and Sufism World Report.