

Aliaa Dakrouy [adakrou@connect.carleton.ca] received her BA from Cairo University, Egypt, and both her MA and Ph.D degrees from Carleton University, Ottawa, Canada in communication studies. She teaches communication in the School of Journalism and Communication and the Department of Sociology, Carleton University. Dr. Dakrouy is the recipient of the 2005 Canadian Communication Association's Van Horne Award. Her teaching experience, research interests, and publications concentrate on communication history, human rights, culture, globalization, and Canadian public policy. She is an active member of such human rights organizations as the Right to Communicate Group, the International Freedom of Expression Exchange (IFEX), the World Association for Christian Communication (WACC), among others. She was recently nominated as an Honorary Expert in Islamic Studies in the Islamic Resource Bank (IRB), a joint project of the Minaret of Freedom Institute, the Association of Muslim Social Scientists of North America, and the International Institute of Islamic Thought. Dr. Dakrouy has presented numerous papers at such Canadian and international conferences as the Canadian Communication Association, the Middle East Studies Association (MESA), the Association of Muslim Social Scientists of North America (AMSS), and the Canadian Ethnic Studies Association. Her publications have appeared in such academic journals as the Journal of International Communication; Media Development: Journal of the World Association for Christian Communication; the American Journal of Islamic Social Sciences (AJISS); Reconstruction: Studies in Contemporary Culture; the Journal of InterGroup Relations; the Global Media Journal - American Edition; and the Journal of Culture, Language, and Representation.