

Celene Ayat Lizzio [clizzio@mail.harvard.edu] is a research affiliate at the Islam in the West Program at Harvard University and a coordinator of the public resource IslamopediaOnline.org, a web-based resource documenting the contemporary reification and contestation of Muslim religious authority and politics. Ms. Lizzio also serves on the Religious and Theological Studies faculty at Merrimack College where she teaches courses on gender and Islam. Her forthcoming publications include: “Gendering Ritual: A Muslimah’s Reading of the Laws of Menstrual Preclusion,” in Control, Consent and Choice: New Voices of Muslim Women Theologians, edited by E. Mendeni, E. Aslan, and M. Hermansen (Brill); “Refining the ‘Islamic’: The Import of Critical Gender Analysis,” in The Global Muslim Community at a Crossroads, edited by A. Basit (Praeger); “Muslim Minorities and the Registration of Civil Marriages,” with Zainab Alwani, in Facts, Fears, and Future: Muslim Family Law in Western Societies, edited by M. S. Berger (Leiden University Press), and “Women’s Leadership in North American Islam,” with Shenila Khoja-Moojli, in Religious Leadership, edited by S. H. Callahan (Sage). Her essays and editorials appear in a variety of publications including The Harvard Independent, The Daily Princetonian, Misbah Magazine, Islamic Horizons, and The Multimedia Encyclopedia of Women in Today’s World (Sage, 2011). She is interested in the relationship between gender and epistemological authority as well as in the interplay between civil and religious laws in the area of Muslim family law. Ms. Lizzio is a graduate of Harvard Divinity School (M.Div.) and Princeton University (A.B., summa cum laude), and is an affiliate of the Women’s Studies in Religion Program at Harvard where she is assisting in organizing an upcoming event entitled: “Muslim Women’s Religious Literacy: The Legacy of Nanu Asma’u in the 21st Century and Beyond” with esteemed guest His Eminence the Sultan of Sokoto.
