

Daniel P. Wolk [dannowolk@gmail.com] studied sociocultural anthropology at University of Pennsylvania (B.A., Magna Cum Laude, with Distinction, 1977), and earned an M.A. in socio-cultural-linguistic anthropology at the University of Chicago (1981). He won the Roy D. Albert Prize for his thesis on visions of utopia and the future in the writings of Marx, Nietzsche and Weber. Wolk was employed with a local voluntary agency to resettle Iraqi Christian refugees in Chicago. He also spent many years as a program evaluator for ethnic and immigrant educational programs in Chicago, with the Field Museum and the Chicago Department Public Schools. He taught for seven years in the University of Chicago's core undergraduate program in the social sciences, including three years as a Harper faculty teaching fellow. He also taught at DePaul University, the University of Alabama at Birmingham, and most recently at the new University of Kurdistan Hawler (UKH) in the Kurdistan Federal Region of Iraq, where he taught in the Sociology Department. He has published papers on the Assyrian community of Chicago, the sociology of religion, cognitive semantics of the Modern Assyrian language, and a review essay on metaphors and image schemas in the Bible (in press). Currently he is completing a Ph.D. dissertation on the Assyrian community of Chicago, as well as a book-length manuscript on competing forms of governance at a Middle Eastern University, using a sociology of organizations framework complemented by cultural models theory. This paper is based on the competing forms of university governance projects.