

Fatma Tutuncu [tutuncu_f@ibu.edu.tr] teaches politics in the Department of Public Administration at Abant Izzet Baysal University, Bolu, Turkey. She received her Ph.D in politics from the Department of Political Science and Public Administration, Middle East Technical University (METU), Ankara, Turkey, with a thesis titled: “The National Pedagogy of the Early Republican Era in Turkey.” Her academic research interests include secularism, Islamism, morality and gender. Her focus is primarily on popular advice literature in the construction of secular and Islamist morality in daily life. She participated in many workshops and conferences, including the International Workshop on a Different Approach to Debates on Political Islam: Micro-Level Studies, Department of Middle East Studies at Ben Gurion University of the Negev (June 2-4, 2008), Beersheva, Israel; the Ninth Mediterranean Social and Political Research Meeting, Workshop Three: The Social Role of Intellectuals in the Middle East (March 12-15, 2008), Florence, Italy; and European Consortium for Political Research, Joint Sessions, University of Helsinki (May 7-12, 2007), Helsinki, Finland; with the papers respectively, “Political Islam, Islamist Matchmaking Websites and Feminine Agency;” “From the Interlocutor of Islam to the Intellectual of Islamism? Social Function of Islamist Women in Turkey;” and “Critical ACTS without a Critical Mass: The Substantive Representation of Women in the Turkish Parliament.” Her publications appeared in Parliamentary Affairs and British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies. She is a former visiting scholar at the University of Michigan. Currently she is a visiting scholar in the program of Women, Gender and Sexuality at Harvard University, with a research project on the Islamist life coaches in Turkey.