

Jacqueline Brinton [jabrinton@davidson.edu] received her BA (1989) from Hampshire College, and both her MA and Ph.D (2009) from the University of Virginia, Charlottesville. Her dissertation was entitled, “Preaching Islamic Renewal: Shaykh Muhammad Mitwalli Sha’rawi and the Syncretization of Revelation and Contemporary Life.” Dr. Brinton is currently visiting assistant professor of religion at Davidson College in Davidson, NC. Her main areas of interest within the discipline of Islamic studies include the role of the ulama in contemporary Islam, discourse and the continuity of religious tradition, popular religion, preaching, and media and religion. She has presented the following papers at the annual meetings of the American Academy of Religion: “Communicating Religion in the Contemporary World: Shaykh Muhammad Mitwalli Sha’rawi Islamic Preacher of the People” (2007); “The Role of Islamist Rhetoric in the Perpetuation of Violence Against Muslims: The Case of Hasan al-Turabi and Genocide in the Sudan” (2006); and “The Role of the Ulama and the Sufis in Political Reform: The Case of the Late Ottoman Empire” (2004).