

Juliane Hammer [jhammer1@gmu.edu] is assistant professor of Islamic studies in the Department of Religious Studies at George Mason University, Fairfax, VA. Previously, she taught at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, and Elon University. She holds an MA and Ph.D in Islamic studies from Humboldt University in Berlin, Germany. In 2002-2003, she was a postdoctoral fellow at the Center for Muslim-Christian Understanding at Georgetown University, Washington, DC. Her dissertation research focused on contemporary Palestinian society, specifically Palestinian diaspora communities, refugee issues, and the experiences of returnees to Palestine in the 1990s. Her book Palestinians Born in Exile: Diaspora and the Search for a Homeland (University of Texas Press) was published in 2005. In 2007-2008, Dr. Hammer was visiting assistant professor and fellow in the Department for Near Eastern Studies at Princeton University. Her research interests include Muslims in America, Islamic education, gender issues, and Sufism. Her current research projects focus on American-Muslim intellectuals and their contributions to contemporary Muslim thought. Dr. Hammer has published several articles on American-Muslim women scholars, Qur'an interpretation and gender discourses in American-Muslim communities. She is currently working on a book manuscript examining the discourses surrounding the woman-led Friday prayer in New York in 2005. The book analyzes the writings of American Muslim women related to the prayer and argues that the debate surrounding the prayer allows for a larger examination of gender discourses among American Muslims regarding women's leadership, mosque participation, media representations and Qur'an interpretations. Dr. Hammer has presented at international and national conferences and has organized workshops on Muslims in America and Muslims and media representations. She is a member of the steering committee of the Study of Islam Section at the American Academy of Religion and an editorial board member for the journal Contemporary Islam. She has taught courses on Muslims in America, women and gender in Islam, contemporary Muslim societies, Sufism, Islamic religious practices, as well as introductory courses on Islam, world religions and global issues.