

Khaled Fahmy [khaled.fahmy@aucegypt.edu] is professor and chair of the Department of History at the American University in Cairo, Egypt (AUC). After graduating from AUC with a B.A. in economics and an M.A. in political science in 1985 and 1988, respectively, he studied at Oxford where he received a Ph.D. in modern history in 1993. He then taught in the U.S., first in the Near Eastern Studies Department at Princeton University (1994-1999), then in the Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies Department at New York University (1999-2010), before returning to his alma mater in 2010. Professor Fahmy's research interests revolve around the social and cultural history of modern Egypt. His first book, All the Pasha's Men: Mehmed Ali, His Army and the Making of Modern Egypt (Cambridge, 1997), offered a critical social history of Egypt's first standing army in modern times, while his second book, The Body and Modernity: Essays in Law and Medicine in Modern Egypt came out in Arabic in 2004. His third book, Mehmed Ali: From Ottoman Governor to Ruler of Egypt (Oneworld, 2008) offered a critical account of Mehmed Ali Pasha who is otherwise dubbed as the "founder of modern Egypt." He is currently finishing a co-edited volume (with Amr Shalakany) on the history of Egyptian law from Mamluk times to the present, and a large study on the history of Shari'ah, public hygiene, urban planning and medicine in Egypt during the nineteenth century. Since the outbreak of the January 25, 2011 Revolution in Egypt, Professor Fahmy has been actively engaged in many public forums. In addition to appearing frequently on Egyptian and international TV stations to talk about current affairs in Egypt, he has also written numerous newspaper articles on such diverse topics as the campaigns against torture and capital punishment, free speech, freedom of information, Salafi thought and the Muslim Brotherhood. Beginning in Fall 2014, Prof. Fahmy will serve as a Carnegie Centennial Fellow at Columbia University, NY.