

Khalid Madhi [kmadhi2@uic.edu] is adjunct professor of Islamic tradition, political science and the Arabic language at St. Xavier University and Loyola University, Chicago, IL. He left his native Morocco after his undergraduate studies in economics at the University of King Mohammed I, Oujda; University Moulay Ismail, Meknes and Institut Supérieur International de Tanger, Morocco. In Chicago, he received his MA in political science at Northeastern Illinois University. While completing his doctoral work in political science at the University of Illinois at Chicago, Khalid Madhi obtained a College Teaching Preparation Program Certificate from the Council for Excellence in Teaching and Learning. His research interests include urban politics, space identity in tourism, marginalities, conceptions of power and the status of the “Other” in the contemporary determinations of politics. The following are among his academic presentations: “Marrakesh: Commodifying the Orientalist Dream,” at the Midwest Political Science Association (MPSA) Chicago, IL (April, 2011); “The Paris of the Sahara: The Logic and Language of Urban Boosterism in the Case of Marrakesh,” at the Illinois Political Science Association (IPSA), Glenview, IL (February, 2011); “Justice, Human Rights and Democratization in 21st Century Morocco,” at the Mirror Images: Challenges for Arab and Islamic Studies Conference, Villanova University, PA (April, 2008); “Muslims in the Twenty-First Century America: The Role of Religion in Shaping a Community’s Political Behavior,” at the 15th Annual Illinois Conference of Students of Political Science, Illinois State University, Normal, IL (March, 2007); and “Spirituality and Democratization: The Role of Jama`at al-`Adl Wal Ihsan in Democratizing the Moroccan Society,” at the 15th Annual Student Research And Creative Activities Symposium” Northeastern Illinois University, Chicago, IL (April, 2007).