

Khanum Shaikh [khanums@gmail.com] is a University of California presidential postdoctoral fellow for 2010-2012 in the Department of History at the University of California, Santa Barbara. She earned her doctorate in women's studies from the University of California, Los Angeles in 2009. Her scholarship is located at the intersections of postcolonial and transnational feminist studies and her research focuses on gender, Islamization, and Pakistani women's religious movements. She is currently writing about different types of Muslim women's religious-based movements (radical and reformist) in contemporary urban Pakistan, including Al-Huda International and the JamiaHafsa movement affiliated with the Red Mosque in Islamabad, Pakistan. In another project, she is looking at the shortcomings of feminist theoretical frameworks in articulating a praxis that addresses religious orthodoxies proliferating in some Muslim communities (and their gendered and sexual implications), while remaining attune to layers of Islamophobia that frame how these orthodoxies come into transnational circulation. Over the last ten years, Dr. Shaikh has taught classes in women's studies at various California State University campuses. She received the American Association of University Women (AAUW) Dissertation Fellowship from 2007-2008, the Woodrow Wilson Women's Studies Dissertation Fellowship in 2007, and the National Science Foundation (NSF), Doctoral Dissertation Research Improvement Grant between 2006-2007.
