

Mashal Saif [mashalsaif@gmail.com] is a Ph.D. candidate in the Graduate Program of Religion at Duke University, NC. Her dissertation examines how 'ulama (traditional Muslim scholars) contest tradition and authority in contemporary Pakistan. During her graduate career she was awarded a number of fellowships and grants, including the American Academy of Religion's International Dissertation Research Grant. She recently participated in the Building Bridges seminar hosted by Georgetown University in Qatar. Her research interests include Islam in contemporary South Asia, the trans-temporal dynamics between medieval and modern Islamic discourses, shifts in legal religions imaginaries, contemporary Muslim political theology and the anthropology of the state. She holds a B.A. from Macalester College, St. Paul, MN where she triple majored in religious studies, Asian studies and international studies. She received her M.A. from the Graduate Program of Religion at Duke University. Her publications include entries in The Oxford Encyclopedia of Philosophy, Science and Technology in Islam, Encyclopedia of Islam and Women, Encyclopedia of Indian Religions, Encyclopedia of Islamic Political Thought and the Encyclopedia of Muslim-American History. She has also authored a book chapter titled "Muslim Middle East," in Religion and Everyday Life and Culture. Ms. Saif has presented papers at a variety of international conferences, including the Annual Conference on South Asia in Madison, WI; the American Academy of Religion, national and regional conferences; the Annual Conference of the American Council for the Study of Islamic Societies; the Annual Duke-UNC Graduate Islamic Studies Conference; and others. While conducting dissertation research in Pakistan in 2011-2012, she was invited to give talks at a number of universities in Lahore and Islamabad.