

Mohamed Nimer [nimer@american.edu] is assistant professor at the School of International Service, American University, Washington, DC. His research interests include cross cultural communication, American politics and public policy, Muslim politics and development, Muslims in the West, contemporary Arab world, and modern Islamic thought. He has taught courses on Islamic reform movements at the International Institute of Islamic Thought, VA. Among his recent publications is an edited volume titled: Islamophobia and Anti-Americanism: Causes and Remedies (Amana Publications, 2007). He is also the author of The North American Muslim Resource Guide: Muslim Community Life in the United States and Canada (Routledge, 2002). His other publications include: "Muslims in American Public Life," in Yvonne Haddad's Muslims in the West: From Sojourners to Citizens (Oxford University Press, 2004). In May 2008, he presented a paper on "Middle East Peacebuilding: Engaging the Islamists" at the Center for Global Peace at American University. Previously, Dr. Nimer wrote reports and conducted surveys on Muslims in America at the Council on American-Islamic Relations, Washington, DC. He developed a panel series and made frequent media appearances to discuss current issues. He also served as a scholar with Muslims in the American Public Square Project at Georgetown University, Washington, DC. Dr. Nimer conducted field research in the Middle East and speaks Arabic fluently. Among his policy writings is a paper titled: "Backtracking on Democratization in Egypt: Implications for US Policy." Professor Nimer is an interdisciplinarian who earned his Ph.D degree in political science from the University of Utah in 1995.