

Norbani Binti Ismail [norbani@iiu.edu.my] is assistant professor of the Qur'an and Sunnah studies at the International Islamic University Malaysia [IIUM], Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. She teaches courses on sciences of the Qur'an, revelation as source of knowledge, and the biography of the Prophet Muhammad. She obtained her MA and Ph.D degrees in the Qur'an and Sunnah studies from the International Islamic University Malaysia [IIUM], with emphasis on tafsir. Her doctoral dissertation, "Methods of Studying Women Issues in the Qur'anic Interpretations of al-Sha'rawi and Hamka," is in Arabic. Dr. Norbani also received her BA in Islamic studies from the International Islamic University Malaysia (IIUM). She wrote her MA thesis on "The British Orientalists and Their Translations of Surah Maryam: A Comparative Study" (in English). Her research interests include the classical and contemporary interpretation of the Qur'an, and women and the interpretation of the Qur'an in Southeast Asia. She is currently working on a research project focusing on female Muslim preachers in Malaysia and their contribution in educating the public on Islam. Dr. Norbani is also conducting research on an eminent Malay Islamic figure of the early 20th century, Syed Sheikh al-Hadi, and his empowerment of women through his writings at a time where women were mostly confined to their homes. She is also a residential fellow at IIUM's student residential housing. She speaks Malay, English, and Arabic and loves to travel and cook. She was born in Malaysia where she currently lives.
