

Samy Ayoub [sayoub@email.arizona.edu] is a Ph.D. candidate at the School of Middle Eastern and North African Studies (MENAS) at the University of Arizona. He studied human rights law, statutory interpretation, international law, gender and law, and constitutional law at the James E. Rogers College of Law. He specializes in Islamic law, law and modernity, and legal theory. His research covers the history of Islamic law and judicial processes in the late Ottoman Empire. Mr. Ayoub holds a B.A. in Arabic and Islamic studies from Al-Azhar University in Cairo, and an M.Sc in Islamic and Middle Eastern studies from the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, UK. Mr. Ayoub is trained in Islamic jurisprudence and received a systematic instruction in Ḥanafī jurisprudence in Cairo, Egypt. His research on Islamic law has led to several papers presented at (among other academic gatherings) the VII Islamic Legal Studies Conference of the International Society for Islamic Legal Studies in Ankara, Turkey, in 2012, at which he presented a paper titled, “The Egyptian Inheritance Statute: The Irrelevance of Territoriality?” His work on the concept of territoriality in Islamic jurisprudence was published in March 2012 in Contemporary Islamic Studies. His interest in the debate on the role of Islamic law in the Egyptian legal system which is highlighted in his commentary and translation of the Egyptian judge Tariq al-Bishri’s work, Shari’a and Contemporary Positive Law in Egypt, is currently under review with Yale University Press.