

Shabana Mir [shabana.mir@okstate.edu] is assistant professor at Oklahoma State University, Stillwater, OK, where she teaches graduate courses in qualitative research methods and social foundations. Dr. Mir obtained her Ph.D in education policy studies and anthropology from Indiana University, Bloomington, IN. Her doctoral dissertation, “Constructing Third Spaces: American Muslim Undergraduate Women’s Hybrid Identity Construction,” won the Outstanding Dissertation Award for 2006 from the Council on Anthropology and Education (American Anthropological Association). The dissertation was based on ethnographic research that examined American Muslim undergraduate women’s religious, ethnic, gender and civic identities in the context of youth and leisure culture on university campuses. Her research is to be published by the University of North Carolina Press. She has contributed chapters to Educating the Muslims of America; Comparative Education: the Dialectic of the Global and the Local; Nurturing Child and Adolescent Spirituality and Muslim Voices in School. She has published in Anthropology & Education Quarterly, Journal of Religion, Anthropology News, Chronicle of Higher Education, the American Journal of Islamic Social Sciences (AJISS), the Encyclopedia of Modern Asia, the Encyclopedia of Islam in North America, The Washington Post, Newsweek, Islamic Studies, Q-News, and on the web. She is an active member of the Council on Anthropology and Education in the American Anthropological Association, and chair of the Committee on the Anthropology of Postsecondary Education. She is also involved in the Comparative and International Education Society, and the Association of Muslim Social Scientists of North America (AMSS). She is a columnist for Religion Dispatches, and is an international public speaker on issues of religion, gender, and education.
