

Sumaiya Hamdani [shamdani@gmu.edu] is associate professor in the History and Art History Department at George Mason University, VA. She received her MA and Ph.D in Islamic history from the Near Eastern Studies Department at Princeton University in 1995. She is the author of the book Between Revolution and State: Qadi al-Nu`man and the Construction of Fatimid Legitimacy (London, 2006), and articles on Shi'ism. Her current research explores religious experience of Muslim minorities in South Asia. She founded and was director of the Islamic Studies Program at George Mason University, has served on committees for AMSS, Middle East Studies Association, American Institute of Yemeni Studies, and as review editor and contributor of Hanwa: the Journal of Women in Middle Eastern and Islamic Societies. She has also contributed regularly to the International Journal of Middle East Studies, the Digest of Middle East Studies, the Turkish Studies Journal, and the Journal of the American Oriental Society. She has also been a recipient of research grants from the Fulbright Foundation, the Social Science Research Council, and George Mason University. Her teaching includes courses on Islamic and Middle East history, history of the Islamic Mediterranean, history of Central Asia, history of Shi'ism, women in Islam, and world history.