

Zareena A. Grewal [zareena.grewal@yale.edu] is assistant professor of American Studies and Religious Studies at Yale University, New Haven, CT. She is the author of articles and chapters about the intersections of race and religion in American Muslim communities. She is also a filmmaker who directed and produced a documentary about the scrutiny of American Muslims' patriotism titled By the Dawn's Early Light: Chris Jackson's Journey to Islam, featured on the Documentary Channel, as well as a film on hip hop and poetry in post-colonial Tanzania titled: Swahili Fighting Words. Currently, she is completing a book on the global dimensions of Islam's "crisis of authority," specifically on pedagogical networks that connect American mosques to the intellectual centers of the Middle East, titled: Destination Tradition: American Islam and the Crisis of Authority. She is also the director of research for the Center for the Study of American Muslims at the Institute for Social Policy and Understanding.
